

On several occasions this year, most recently in August, staffers with The Hollywood Reporter visited the Walk of Fame to document the nature and extent of its long-term disrepair. The sidewalk is comprised of more than 2,500 stars. (The Hollywood Chamber of Commerce, which administers the Walk of Fame, honors film, television, recording, radio and live performance.) After examining all of the stars, THR determined that roughly one-fifth of them are in some significant state of decay. This is the itemized damage report, recording stars that are cracked, gouged or have damaged brass inlays. For reference, some individuals appear multiple times because they received stars in more than one category.
